Vision for Literacy

Business Pledge 2024

Literacy changes everything.

Without good literacy skills, it's hard to live the life you want.

The award-winning Vision for Literacy Business Pledge, now in its ninth year, is backed by 109 businesses who are all committed to changing lives through literacy.

Our country's future prosperity will be driven by the productivity of the next generation. As businesses, we therefore have both a social responsibility and a commercial incentive to empower children and young people with the literacy skills they need for school, work and life. This support needs to start at birth and continue through to GCSE level and beyond. Targeted early language interventions to assist in the development of language, communication and literacy skills are critical for social mobility and can help set up a child for life.

The disadvantage gap in early literacy skills is costing England £830 million every year.¹

This support throughout a child's life needs a firm foundation from an early age. Shockingly, over 185,000 five-year-olds started school last year without the literacy, communication and language skills they needed to thrive.² Without this fundamental base, not only will their learning, confidence and wellbeing suffer in their early school days, but they are much more likely to struggle with their GCSEs and be unemployed by their 30s.

Children experiencing poverty are most likely to be affected. Sadly, in the UK, where you are born and how wealthy your family is still often determines where you end up in life. This is particularly evident in the uneven access to school libraries: 1 in 7 primary schools in England do not have a library, rising to 1 in 4 in disadvantaged areas. This means that over three-quarters of a million children in the UK do not have access to books that we know enable better educational outcomes and greater wellbeing, further perpetuating the cycle of inequality.³

Businesses have a unique role to play to address this complex issue. As business leaders, we are committing ourselves to putting support for children from the most disadvantaged communities at the heart of a national conversation, as well as pledging to empower our employees and customers by providing them with the necessary tools, resources, and support to drive tangible progress in this crucial area.

Together, we can empower families with opportunities and advice to nurture their child's development. This will pave the way for a future where every child has the foundation they need to thrive academically, professionally and personally.

We pledge to take action (commensurate with size) to close the literacy gap and safeguard children's futures. We will do this through:

- 1. External reach. Engaging our customers, partners and suppliers to help children across the UK change their story.
- 2. Colleague engagement. Engaging our internal networks to raise awareness and funds for the National Literacy Trust.
- 3. Leadership. Using our voice and local influence to help raise awareness of the importance of literacy and make it a priority for politicians, businesses and parents/carers.

Audible

Audible first joined forces with the National Literacy Trust five years ago. Since then, Audible has been championing the National Literacy Trust's mission to empower children and families from disadvantaged backgrounds with the literacy skills they need to reach their full potential.

In 2019, we launched Inside Stories with Audible, a project that brings podcast and audio production skills to young people in custody, supporting them to improve their wellbeing and confidence, build communication skills, and raise aspirations, through sessions centred around audio content creation. We've delivered podcast-making sessions in HMP/YOI Isis, in partnership with Prison Radio Association. We've also hosted the cast of the Kurupt FM podcast and partnered with Finding Rhythms at HMYOI Feltham. The project enables all young people in HMYOI Feltham to access Amazon Kindle Fire tablets, which feature a wide range of audiobooks to support their learning and enjoyment of books.

Together, we support schools with a high percentage of free school meals to develop literacy projects for their reluctant writers. Between 2019–2022, we supported 4,848 young people from schools in London and Birmingham to engage with poetry through Young City Poets. We enable pupils to engage with literacy on their terms by creating memorable experiences to help bring writing to life.

Since 2022, we've reached 1,050 pupils from 30 secondary schools across the UK through The Power of Voice, which empowers young people to tell the stories that matter to them, harnessing the power of writing to explore their civic identities and use their own voices to drive change.

Whether it's sponsoring ground-breaking research into the effects of audiobooks on children's imaginations, delivering marketing campaigns, recommending the best audiobooks for families to share stories together, or delivering creative poetry workshops for vulnerable young people, Audible is helping children and young people find their voices and build aspirations for their future.

Lancôme

Since our partnership launched in 2018, Lancôme and the National Literacy Trust have supported over 6,000 young people through our Words for Work: Women in Leadership programme. The programme gives young women in post-16 education the literacy skills, leadership abilities and confidence they need to achieve their full potential in the workplace.

Through the partnership, students meet with inspirational Lancôme employees in person and through online business masterclass sessions, where volunteers share key insights to the application of literacy skills in their roles, and their experiences as women in the workplace. We also run teacher-led workshops to further develop these skills, as well as other employability skills such as presenting and interview practice.

We also run panel events throughout the year, which bring together inspiring women such as authors including Sophia Thakur, and women from a range of different sectors and job roles. The panels are an opportunity for students to hear about the women's journeys to success, as well the challenges they face and how they use literacy skills to overcome them. Students are also able to further their own communication skills through the Q&A element of the panels.

We have identified key areas of need to deliver the programme in Nottingham, Manchester, Dublin and London. We focus partnership activity on key dates such as Lancôme's firmwide volunteering Citizens' Day, and International Women's Day.

"I thought the programme was very insightful and I actually realised that the literacy we do at school is as important as my teachers have said for when I leave school and start my career!" – feedback from student participant

WHSmith

WHSmith and the National Literacy Trust have a long-established partnership spanning nearly two decades and rooted in a shared passion for literacy and life-long learning. The partnership spans many varied touch points, including fundraising through WHSmith stores, book donations and campaign activity, as well as funding for our Young Readers Programme. So far, our partnership has supported over 31,500 primary aged children, provided over 120,000 books to children that otherwise would not have had them, and raised over £500,000 for the National Literacy Trust. Last year, the impact of our partnership was recognised at the Corporate Engagement Awards, where we were delighted to win a Gold award for Best Education Programme and a Bronze award for Best Collaborative Approach.

WHSmith are also a key founding partner of the National Literacy Trust's Early Words Matter campaign, and launched the campaign in 113 stores last summer by sharing book recommendations and reading tips with parents. They also fund a community programme in the most deprived area of Swindon that helps parents support their children's early literacy and communication; without this programme children would start primary school up to 19 months behind their more fortunate peers.

Our partnership continues to expand to change the life stories of children across the UK.
